About the Project

National University of Study and Research in Law (NUSRL), Ranchi, is leading a transformative initiative to address prolonged undertrial detention and strengthen legal education for young lawyers in Jharkhand. The state's prisons, operating at 118.8% capacity, house a significant number of undertrial prisoners, many confined for years due to legal representation gaps, bail constraints, and lack of awareness. Additionally, first-generation lawyers, especially from Adivasi and Dalit backgrounds, face limited mentorship, inadequate practical training, and weak exposure to litigation, hampering their ability to represent marginalized communities effectively. To tackle these challenges, the project will provide legal assistance to 400+ undertrial prisoners in Ranchi Central Jail and Khunti Sub Jail, focusing on securing bail and case resolution. Simultaneously, a six-month Continuing Legal Education (CLE) program will equip 175 young lawyers with advanced litigation skills and mentorship, bridging critical gaps in legal practice. The initiative will further drive policy advocacy, engage Undertrial Review Committees (UTRCs), and conduct a district court survey to assess caseload trends. By combining direct intervention, professional development, and systemic reforms, NUSRL aims to advance justice accessibility, foster legal empowerment, and create lasting impact for marginalized communities in Jharkhand.
